INTRODUCTION

THE CARR FAMILY OF DUPLIN COUNTY

Jacob Wesley Carr, who collected and preserved the early data about the Carr family in Duplin County, was born on the 13th of October, 1827, and died at Rose Hill, N. C., on the 16th of April 1898. In his early manhood he moved to Florida where he spent several years, after which he returned to Duplin County, where he accepted a position with "Southerland and Whitehead" in their mercantile business. Later he moved to Wilson, N. C., where he remained until he was appointed conductor on the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad, which position he held until his duty called him home to care for his parents during their declining years. Soon after the Civil War he moved to Rose Hill, N. C., where he conducted a mercantile business until his death. While a young man he connected himself with the Methodist Church at Charity Chapel and continued a consistent member there during his life. He never married, but lived a life of devotion to his near relatives and friends by whom he was much loved.

During the later part of his life he spent much time and money collecting sufficient facts to make a connected history of the Duplin branch of the Carr family. In his declining years, after his health had so far failed that he could not put the facts in proper shape for publication, he requested me to take up the work with him; but for many reasons we failed to get together long enough at one time to carry out his wishes, and accomplish what seemed to be the chief ambition of his life. Upon his death the information which he had gathered fell into my hands as his executor, and the desire that his most cherished hope might to some extent be realized and that his many relatives might receive the benefits of his labors prompted me to undertake to put together as best I could the information he had so carefully collected, and what I have been able to add thereto. It is but the part of simple justice to say that the chief credit for the basic facts of this collection is due to him alone, and I have no doubt that his many relatives who now survive him will ever hold him in grateful remembrance for his thoughtful, patient and painstaking efforts to perpetuate the geneology of his family. The memorandum he left is entitled: "An Imperfect History of the Carr Family of Duplin County, N. C., May 25th, 1880."

It is not the purpose of this little sketch to record the facts concerning the life of any members of the family as individuals, nor will it be attempted. However, a few characteristics of the family as a whole might be mentioned with propriety. Their chief aspiration seems to have been to live as law abiding citizens, and seldom, if ever, have we found a member of the family arraigned for the violation of the law or engaged even in a civil lawsuit. They have managed to escape both the presidency and the penitentiary. They have never been ambitious, nor have they generally sought "honorable positions"; but both in the Revolutionary and Civil Wars when the call to arms was made, the family furnished all its available strength, and unfortunately a large percentage of them never survived to return home. As to their religious inclinations, some few were Baptists, a good many Methodists, and the great majority Presbyterians; but nowhere have we heard of an Atheist, a Deist, an Infidel, a Universalist or a Roman Catholic in the family. They were unfaltering protestants. No attempt has been made to bring the record down through the present generation, and where recent information is given, it is due to the fact that it is easily available.

I submit these facts to the family, after considerable labor, and trust they will find something of interest in them and overlook the imperfections and errors.

CHAPTER ONE

JOSEPH CARR OF IRELAND

About 1737 Henry E. McCulloch received a grant of lands from the British Government, covering the greater part of the territory now known as Duplin County. These lands were granted on the condition that the grantee would settle them with Protestant emigrants, as a consequence of which several hundred emigrants, mostly Presbyterians from Ireland, came to Duplin County, where they expected to escape religious persecution and better their financial condition. In 1749 Duplin County was created by the General Assembly, and between 1737 and 1749, Joseph Carr, the original ancestor of the Duplin family, came to Wilmington, N. C., on a sailing vessel and thence found his way fifty miles north, where he settled on "Maxwell Swamp," a branch of the North East River.

In 1747-48 the Spaniards threatened the Coast of North Carolina. In June 1747 they took possession of the town of Beaufort. In September 1748 they attacked the town of Brunswick and the citizens were called to arms for defense. On September 4th, 1748, John Dickson, Joseph Carr, William Carr, and others, in, or near the original Carr settlement answered the "alarm" (see State Records Vol. 22, pp. 283). This William Carr, however, was probably a brother of Joseph Carr and the same party who is referred to in the Appendix. Therefore, Joseph Carr must have arrived here prior to 1748, though it has been a family tradition that he moved to Wilmington from Ireland about 1749.

Joseph was unmarried and came over with Captain Beverett and wife, Barbara Gastor Beverett, and her brother, Jacob Gastor, Captain Beverett settled his wife at, or near, the present site of Kenansville, where he built her a comfortable cottage in the colony known as the "Grove Community," and returned to sea where he performed the duties of a sea captain. An unverified tradition says that Mrs. Beverett discovered the present town spring at Kenansville, which she dug with her own hands. Jacob Gastor moved to Moore County where he became a prominent man and represented his county in the General Assembly.

Captain Beverett was lost at sea, and never more returned to Duplin, where he had left his wife and one child, Jacob. After the death of Captain Beverett, Joseph Carr married his widow, Barbara, by whom he had the following children: WILLIAM, JOHN, JAMES, and NANCY. Barbara Gastor was a native of Holland, where she was born and reared, and where she made her home until she became the wife of Captain Beverett and moved to America. Jacob Beverett, the first son of Barbara, married and raised a family, descendants of whom still live in Duplin County. At the age of eighty years he moved to Alabama with his youngest daughter, Dolly, where he died at the age of one hundred and eleven years. Nancy Carr, the only daughter and probably the oldest, or next to the oldest, child of Barbara, by Joseph Carr, married James Morris and died leaving one child, Henry, who, on becoming of age, moved South, since which time his history and that of his descendants have escaped us. The three sons, WILLIAM, JOHN, and JAMES, settled on the north side of "Maxwell Swamp," William on the old place, John adjoining on the east, and James about four miles west, and from these three sons of Joseph Carr we trace the geneology of the Carr family of Duplin County. They were all Presbyterians and the majority of the family have continued to hold to the same religious views to the present day.

CHAPTER TWO

WILLIAM CARR

William Carr, the first son of Joseph and Barbara Carr, known as "Old Uncle Billy," was born in Duplin County in May 1754. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, though no details of his service are available. He appears on the list of North Carolina Revolutionary Pensioners under the Acts of 1811 and 1832 as reported to Congress (see State Records, Vol. 22, pp. 61). The boys, "Dick," "Joe," and "Johnnie" were just old enough for active service at the beginning of the late Civil War. When the call to arms was made, they responded to the call and volunteered their services to the Confederate Cause, leaving their devoted mother all alone on the plantation, after seeing her properly provided for and protected by friends and trusted slaves. They believed their first duty was to the Confederacy and all made gallant soldiers, none of them surviving to return home. "Dick" was a member of Co. "A" 43 Reg., and was killed in battle of Petersburg on April 2nd, 1865; "Joe" was 1st Corporal in same Company and fell at Winchester Sept. 19th, 1864. "Johnnie" was a member of Co. "B" Third Reg.,
